Both Joshua, 20, and his mother expressed disappointment with the Q House experience because of communications. He is a Denver Human Services student and had had multiple mentorships. Also, another couple of students and parents felt the effect of the decline in programs available to RVA students. All students discussed their futures with great optimism, some going into the military, college and the world of work.

The highlight of my visit came with Saul, 18, who spent his time holding his young son, Joshua, who is three months old. His mother and girlfriend were there with him. Saul is so proud to be a father, and I went to see the family again just before I left.
